

SUMMARY: The document below is the copy on the patent rolls of King Henry VIII's grant of Colne Priory and Hedingham Priory to John de Vere (1482-1540), 15th Earl of Oxford, and his heirs on 22 July 1536. On 7 April 1588, Oxford granted these properties as well as the manor of Bretts to Queen Elizabeth by fine and proclamation in the Court of Common Pleas for the sum of £4000. The sum of £4000 merely represented a valuation of the properties for the purposes of the fine. No money would have changed hands because the Queen, by letters patent of 8 June 1588, regranted the properties to Oxford (see ERO T/B 177/3). The purpose of this complicated legal transaction – Oxford's grant of the properties to Queen Elizabeth on 7 April 1588 via the fine, and the Queen's grant of the properties back to Oxford on 8 June 1588 – appears to have been to clear the title so that Oxford now held these properties by a fresh grant to himself and his heirs from Queen Elizabeth, rather than by the original grant from Henry VIII to the 15th Earl and his successors. The manor of Bretts appears to have been included in the fine and regrant for the same purpose. It had once belonged to the Countess of Salisbury, had presumably escheated to the Crown when she was executed for treason in 1541, and was thus likely the subject of a grant from Henry VIII to some third party. Oxford had purchased Bretts on 7 March 1584 from Roger Townshend (c.1544-1590), and he may have felt it advisable to clear the title to it in the foregoing manner as well. As a result of the Queen's letters patent of 8 June 1588, Oxford held Colne Priory, Hedingham Priory and Bretts to himself and the heirs of his body lawfully begotten (in 1588 these were his three daughters by Anne Cecil), and failing such issue to the heirs of the body of the 15th Earl, at an annual rent of £66.

On 14 April 1592, at the petition of Sir John Norris (1547x50-1597) the Queen issued letters patent granting her reversionary interest in Colne Priory to Theophilus Adams and Thomas Butler and their heirs forever, to be held by the fortieth part of one knight's fee at an annual rent of £66 (see ERO D/DPr/631). The rent formerly paid by Oxford for Colne Priory was thus transferred to the Queen's grant of the reversionary interest to Adams and Butler. The transfer of the £66 rent appears to have been a direct result of Oxford's sale of Colne Priory two months earlier, on 7 February 1592, to Richard Harlakenden (see ERO D/DU 256/1). Two things were thus accomplished by the Queen's letters patent of 14 April 1592. Firstly, the rent to the Crown for Colne Priory was transferred to the reversionary interest. Secondly, the first step was taken to unite Oxford's former interest, and the Queen's reversionary interest, in a single owner, Richard Harlakenden. It seems clear that Sir John Norris, Theophilus Adams, and Thomas Butler were intermediaries, and that their function was merely to obtain a grant of the Queen's reversionary interest and to pass it on, for a fee, to Richard Harlakenden so that, with Oxford's original interest and the Queen's reversionary interest united, Harlakenden would become sole owner of the two interests in Colne Priory which had formerly been separate. The Queen's reversionary interest in Colne Priory, like any reversionary interest, was contingent on an event, namely the eventual failure of the line of de Vere heirs. Once Oxford had sold Colne Priory to Richard Harlakenden on 7 February 1592, the dependence of the Queen's reversionary interest on the failure of the de Vere line was an anomalous condition, and this is doubtless why the Queen was prepared to part with it, provided she continued to receive the £66 annual rent.

The manor of Hinxton in Cambridge and the rectories of Dovercourt and Harwich named in the original grant below are not mentioned in the Queen's regrant to Oxford of 8 June 1588 (see ERO T/B 177/3) because they had been sold prior to 1588.

According to the inquisition post mortem taken on 27 September 1604, at the time of his death Oxford still owned the portions of tithes pertaining to the rectories of Mount Bures, Stansted, Sible Hedingham, Great Maplestead, Little Maplestead, Aldham and Lavenham comprised in the original grant below. The rectory of Walter Belchamp comprised in the grant below is also mentioned in Oxford's inquisition post mortem.

The grant below specifies that the value of the properties and other assets comprised in it is £160 per annum, and that they are to be held by the 15th Earl and his heirs in capite by knight service, by the twentieth part of one knight's fee. The total annual rent to be paid to the Court of Augmentations for the properties is stated to be £66, consisting of a rent of £16 12s by way of a tithe or tenth, and an additional rent of £49 8s.

Some of the text in the first four lines cannot be read because of a fold in the document, and has been conjecturally supplied, indicated by square brackets in the Latin transcript below.
