

SUMMARY: The document below is the copy on the patent rolls of King Henry VIII's grant, dated 29 April 1544, of certain manors to John de Vere (1516-1562), 16th Earl of Oxford, and his first wife, Dorothy (nee Neville), in exchange for the manors of Dovercourt, Harwich, Great Oakley, Little Oakley, Skighaw, Mose and Beaumont in East Anglia and Hastings in Berkshire, and the payment by the Earl of the sum of £1719 19s 11-1/2d. Under the grant the 16th Earl acquired the manors of Lamarsh, Colne Wake, Burses and Mile End in Essex, East Bergholt in Suffolk, Thorncombe in Devonshire, Fowlswick, Crudwell, Eastcourt and Christian Malford in Wiltshire, and Huish Champflower in Somerset, as well as other parcels. As set out in the document, some of the manors had formerly been the property of suppressed monasteries and priories, others had been the property of Thomas Cromwell (d.1540), Earl of Essex, and Henry Courtenay (1498/9-1538), Marquis of Exeter, attainted and executed for treason, while still others had been the property of Henry VIII's illegitimate son, Henry Fitzroy (1519-1536), Duke of Richmond and Somerset, and the King's grandmother, Margaret (1443-1509), Countess of Richmond and Derby. The fact that the 16th Earl acquired eleven manors in exchange for eight manors and a payment of £1719 19s 11-1/2d suggests that the transaction may have been of benefit to the Earl. However several of the manors acquired by the Earl appear to have been of small value, and the exchange materially decreased the number of tenants in East Anglia with long-term loyalty to the Earls of Oxford who could be raised in time of crisis. Moreover the distance of the manors in Devonshire, Wiltshire and Somerset from the 16th Earl's administrative base in East Anglia would necessarily have increased the Earl's administrative costs and given rise to other problems. Only four years later, when Somerset extorted the lands of the Oxford earldom from the 16th Earl in 1548 (see HL/PO/PB/1551/5E6n35), the Earl had already disposed of the manors of Burses and Mile End, Fowlswick and Huish Champflower, and by the time of his death in 1562 he had also disposed of Crudwell and Eastcourt, while Thorncombe and Christian Malford were among the first manors sold by his son and heir, the 17th Earl. Since he and his heir disposed of them so quickly, it thus seems all but certain that the 16th Earl did not wish to acquire these manors, and that the transaction was instigated by King for his own benefit, and was perhaps specifically designed to weaken the Earl's power base in East Anglia. Such exchanges by Henry VIII were not uncommon. A particularly well-known example, related by Dugdale, is that of Andrew (1467-1543), 1st Lord Windsor, who in 1543 surrendered Stanwell in Middlesex, the chief seat of the Windsor family since Domesday, to Henry VIII in a compulsory exchange for manors in Worcestershire which had been parcel of the lands of the suppressed Bordesley Abbey. It seems not unreasonable to suggest that the King was desirous of acquiring long-established and well-run manors in exchange for the vast array of lands in his hands whose administrative structures had been destroyed by the dissolution of the monasteries or the execution of traitors.

Further particulars of the grant are found in the records of the Court of Augmentations (see Tenth Report of the Deputy Keeper of the Public Records (London: HMSO, 1849), pp. 246-7).

For ease of reference, the property valuations and the amounts to be paid yearly by the 16th Earl specified in the grant have been listed below.
